Feminine principals in notable double wedding which was a Society event of the week

VIVID memories of the old days of the monarchy when the royal family dispensed a hospitality famous the world over were brought to mind on Wednesday when Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Magoon celebrated the double wedding of their now grown children, Miss Helen Magoon and Mr. John Henry Magoon, the former marrying Lieutenant Orville N. Tyler, the 4th United States cavalry, and later Miss Juliet Carroll, daughter of the late Judge Carroll of San Francisco. In spite of a cold and persistent rain which fell all day long, the wedding was held in the most beautiful manner. The ceremony was held in the

from the shoulders, where it was caught with orange blossoms. A soft tulle veil was fastened to her hair with the same bridal blossoms. Her only ornament was a lovely platinum necklace set with pearls and diamonds, the gift of her mother. Miss Carroll's gown was draped in front into a smart little skirt, through which were half-revealed a dainty lace flounce and slippers of satin. Her gown was caught here and there with orange blossoms, the bodice and veil being the counterpart of Miss Magoon's. About her throat she wore a beautiful strand of pearls. The bouquets of both brides were exquisite—personally made by Mr. Ernest Parker. (Graceful sprays of rare mauve-white orchids fell from a huge rosette of fluffy tulle interspersed with cascading loops of silver ribbon caught with chiffon roses and maiden hair.

Miss Gertrude Hopkins, the maid of honor, was daintily attired in yellow satin with tulle draperies of coral colored lace. Small French flowers were caught here and there upon the bodice, fastened also in wreath form in her dark hair. She carried a beautiful shower bouquet of yellow and pink roses, falling from a rosette of silk tulle.

Mrs. Kipling, the matron of honor, was charming in a frock of pale apricot colored chiffon over white satin. The skirt was draped in the prevailing mode and embellished with tiers of ruffles of shadow lace. A pride of blue satin was caught with pink and blue French flowers, clusters of which also caught the draperies of the skirt. Her bouquet was similar to that of the maid of honor.

Mrs. J. A. Magoon wore a stunning Parisian frock of black chambray, with an overdress of white chiffon heavily embroidered in white bugle trimming and jet. The white chiffon was draped gracefully over the right side of the bodice, the left side of black chambray and jet having a contrast of most effective simplicity. A large American Beauty rose was fastened in the corsage.

After the ceremony a wedding supper was served. The wedding cakes which were their orchid ornaments had occupied a conspicuous position in the living room, were cut by both brides. Mrs. Tyler made her husband's cake for that part of the ceremony. A health was drunk to the young couple, who after joining in several of the ensuing dances, made their escape to some mysterious places where they will spend their honeymoons. Mrs. Magoon's going away dress was of taupe-colored crepe de chine, with touches of perles and a Medici collar of cream net. A smart little hat of taupe and cerise colored satin finished the costume. Mrs. Tyler went away in a frock of peacock blue crepe metier with which she wore a dashing coat of blue Canton crepe and black velvet lined with American beauty. Her hat was of black velvet and peacock blue, trimmed with small cerise roses.

After their honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Magoon will occupy a bungalow in town, while Lieutenant and Mrs. Tyler will live at Schofield Barracks, where the former is stationed with his regiment.

The stringed orchestra which played during the ceremony continued its merry invitation until after midnight, the gaiety increasing, if possible, as the evening wore on. Staid old married folk even found themselves responding to the siren call of the music and were seen pirouetting with the most festive rags. Among those noticed at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. F. B. McStocker, Misses McStocker, Mr. Blakely McStocker, Dr. and Mrs. George Herbert, Miss Rose Herbert, Mr. Charles Herbert, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Along, Judge and Mrs. A. Princess Kalaianale's Luncheon.
A surprise party was given to Mrs. Harriet C. Evans by a number of her friends on Monday, the occasion being the fiftieth birthday of that lady. A most pleasant afternoon was spent at which refreshments formed no small part. Making the affair more enjoyable than was anticipated by Mrs. Evans, who had invited a few friends for the day, these few friends took it upon themselves to invite a few more and that is where the surprise came in. Many handsome and useful presents were given Mrs. Evans. Those attending this jolly affair were Mrs. R. Foster, Mrs. C. F. Merrill, Mrs. Ernest Morrison, Mrs. Wm. Hooper, Mrs. Ramsey, Mrs. Ellen Shaw, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. David C. Peters, Mrs. John Hills, Mrs. Stroupe.
